

Tikanga Māori Mātāpono Tikanga Māori Principles

Te mana o te pēpi: Nurturing pēpi (infants) so that they are safe and content. Tikanga practices could include:

- Kaiako talking softly to the pēpi (infant) or the pēpi nohinohi (toddler) about taking him/her to change when there is an unpleasant smell. That way only the child hears, not the whole centre.
- Being consistent in using a range of te reo Māori when providing the pēpi/pēpi nohinohi with a running commentary of what you are doing during the 'process of changing'.
- Engaging in te reo Māori when providing guidance, e.g., Takoto ki raro: lie down now; maranga ki runga: up you get now.
- Supporting pēpi and pēpi nohinohi by being unrushed and calm when carrying out changing routines.
- Carrying out intentional teaching opportunities by explaining the hygiene processes kaiako employ when carrying out changing routines.
- The mana of the pēpi/pēpi nohinohi is always acknowledged through ensuring that the whānau's voice is heard in carrying out culturally appropriate care tikanga.
